Health and Wellness Statement:

Avery Labradors affirms that every precaution has been taken to ensure your puppy has been given the best possible start by carefully choosing sound and healthy parents with exceptional qualities and desirable temperament. Both parents have been run through the gamut of health tests to reduce the chance of producing genetic disorders in their offspring. It is important to note that there are several environmental factors such as diet and exercise which strongly influence disorders previously considered solely genetic in nature. Evidence has shown that conditions such as dysplasia of the elbow/hip and OCD of the hock/shoulder can be influenced as much by environmental factors as genetic ones, so please carefully consider which foods you feed, and what activities you choose as a part of your puppy's new routine.

It is sensible to bear in mind that all living creatures develop ailments that cannot be predicted or controlled. No breeder can ensure that a health or temperament issue will not arise during the life of your puppy, but we can boldly state that every measure has been taken to reduce that risk.

Please consider your breeder a valuable resource for the life of your dog, and feel free to call or e-mail with questions about anything from the smallest to the largest issue.
